A SYSTEM DESIGNED TO SILENCE

Since the onset of the Israeli genocide in Palestine, the repression of Palestine solidarity has escalated dramatically worldwide, and Britain is no exception.

At the European Legal Support Center we have built Britain's Index of Repression, a database documenting the systematic and multi-sited campaign to repress Palestine solidarity across the country. It's the first publicly accessible resource of its kind in Britain, building on the German Index of Repression launched in 2025, and it's designed to make diffuse, systematic repression visible, verifiable, and actionable.

The Index documents incidents of repression dating back to January 2019, and is continuously updated with new incidents. Even so, what's recorded is only the tip of the iceberg, a visible sample of a far wider and deeper mechanism of repression designed to drain the movement's capacity to organise, and to erase Palestinian history, presence, and the facts of their oppression from public consciousness.

This repression draws its force from Britain's deeper structures of violence: capitalism that ties survival to wage labour, border regimes that make residency conditional on political silence and entrenched racial and class hierarchies that determine who gets targeted and how. Students, precarious workers, migrants, and racialised communities – already marginalised by these systems – face the brunt of the repression. To repress Palestine solidarity is, therefore, to reassert the structural power that these systems exist to protect.

Whether you're organising in your workplace, university, in the streets, or in your community – this data is yours to use. Explore the scale of repression, understand who the main actors are and how they operate, and use it to sharpen your strategy at www.index-of-repression.org

This zine takes you through our core analysis, showing what the data makes clear: this is a coordinated campaign, and it can be fought.

THE ARCHITECTURE OF REPRESSION

A THREE-STAGE SEQUENCE

The entire architecture of this repression rests on two allegations: antisemitism and support for terrorism. We can think of these allegations as operational tools. By filtering political dissent through the categories of "racial hatred" and "security threat", the substantive claims of liberation politics at the heart of the Palestinian cause are actively redefined and stripped of meaning.

Repression moves through a consistent sequence: first delegitimising speech, then exhausting resources, then permanently dismantling the conditions of political existence. It strategically targets the core pillars of the solidarity movement – education, healthcare, culture, civil society – because these are the spaces where solidarity is built, where history is taught, and where the movement's moral authority is forged.

1 DISCREDIT & DISTORT

Firstly, the allegations are deployed to distort public discourse. Smear campaigns, censorship and disinformation by media outlets and Zionist advocacy and lawfare groups reframe solidarity as antisemitism or terrorism support. This manufactures the pretext for what follows.

WHAT IS A LAWFARE GROUP?

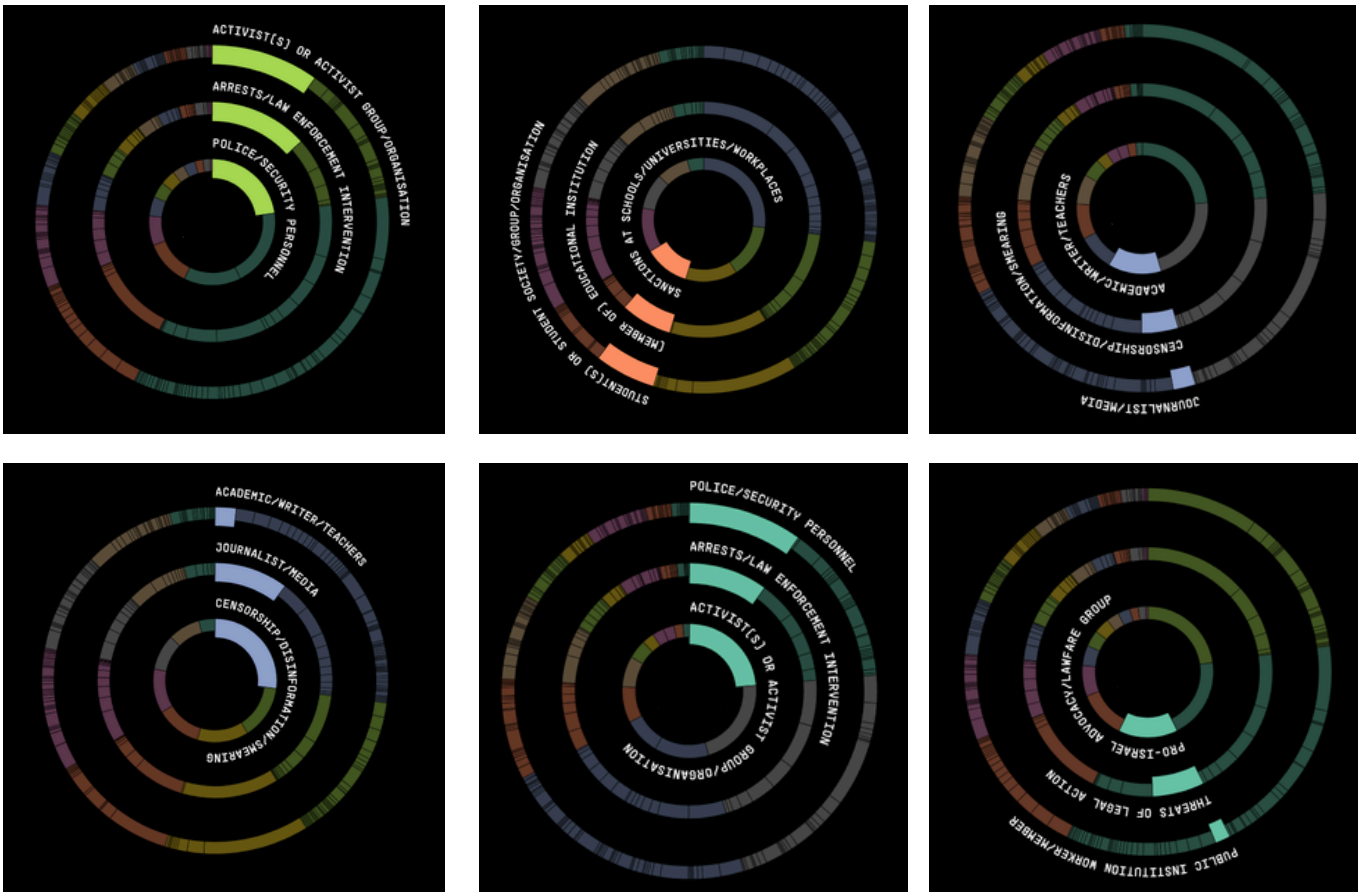

Lawfare groups use legal and quasi-legal tools like complaints mechanisms, regulatory frameworks and employment law to silence political opposition. In the context of Palestine solidarity, they manufacture crises by framing solidarity as antisemitism, then pressure institutions to act on that framing. The goal is to trigger investigations, drain resources, and create a chilling effect. Key actors in Britain include UK Lawyers for Israel (UKLFI), the Campaign Against Antisemitism, and the Community Security Trust – operating alongside media outlets like The Jewish Chronicle and The Telegraph that amplify their narratives as established fact.

2 THREATEN & SANCTION

Allegations are taken up by institutions and translated into formal procedures, triggering investigations, legal threats, suspensions, or event cancellations. Schools, hospitals, universities, and cultural venues invoke counterterrorism frameworks, equality laws, and conduct policies to act as enforcers, and with this validating the original allegation.

3 PUNISH & EXCLUDE

Finally, the allegations justify more material and permanent forms of repression. With the target now formally “labelled”, the various actors involve move to arrests, job terminations, visa cancellations, and financial blacklisting. The goal is not just punishment, but a permanent destruction of the person’s capacity to organise.

HOW REPRESSION IS CARRIED OUT

The categories below are nodes in an integrated system. Repression moves through them sequentially – from discursive attack, through bureaucratic enforcement, to material consequence – while also looping back, each stage reinforcing the last.

Nearly a third of all incidents involve censorship, disinformation, or smearing – the discursive gateways that make everything else possible. These three tactics work together as an integrated assault: censorship removes Palestine solidarity from view; disinformation strips it of historical grounding; smearing ensures that even when it appears, it comes pre-contaminated, attached to a speaker already discredited. The result is a pervasive cloud of illegitimacy – a political position rendered unspeakable, a movement unable to articulate its own story.

INCIDENT CATEGORIES

- Censorship, disinformation & smearing
- Threats of legal action
- Arrests & law enforcement intervention
- Sanctions at schools, universities & workplaces
- Harassment, violence, doxing & surveillance
- Legal, financial & professional repercussions
- Threats to employment or funding
- Demo bans, cancelled events & refusals of service

WHO IS TARGETED

While pervasive and systematic, repression concentrates on the sectors through which Britain's colonial complicity is most visibly challenged: education, healthcare, culture, civil society. These are the spaces where political thinking happens, where solidarity is organised, where history is contested. Controlling them is how the state manages dissent over its own role in the Zionist project – past and present.

Students and academics face a two-pronged attack: smearing by their own institutions and media, followed by direct sanctions. Activists face the most direct state coercion with the most documented arrests. Healthcare workers are pressured through disciplinary procedures, silencing the voices whose moral authority is hardest to suppress.

The numbers only tell part of the story. And even then, they are only a sample of what is actually happening on the ground. What the count cannot capture is the larger group of those deterred before any incident occurs. Those who chose not to speak, stepped back quietly, or decided the risk was too great. Their absence doesn't show up in the database, but it is felt in the movement every day. And no count can capture the cumulative toll on collective morale. The exhaustion of spending more time defending yourself than organising, and the slow wearing down of hope that repression is designed to produce.

THE MOST SYSTEMATICALLY TARGETED GROUPS ARE:

Students, academics, writers & teachers – Attacked in the very spaces where political thinking, teaching, and organising take place.

Activists & organisers – They face the sharpest forms of state violence: arrests, surveillance, harassment, and policing.

Healthcare and other public sector workers – Targeted through disciplinary procedures, complaints, and threats to their employment.

Artists & cultural workers – Events cancelled, venues closed, expression policed.

THE TWO ENABLING WEAPONS

Every mechanism of repression is activated and legitimised through two core allegations. Together they form a governing framework that forces the movement into a permanent defensive position that consumes its resources, fractures its organisational capacity and buries its goals. The allegations are detailed below.

ALLEGING ANTISEMITISM

Anti-Zionist critique is conflated with anti-Jewish racism through the IHRA working definition of antisemitism, adopted widely by British institutions without democratic scrutiny. Lawfare groups like UK Lawyers for Israel (UKLFI) weaponise the Equality Act 2010 and IHRA to frame Palestine solidarity as creating a 'hostile environment' for Jewish people – even when targeting children's artwork, academic lectures, or student union motions.

ALLEGING SUPPORT FOR TERRORISM

The Terrorism Act 2000, Prevent, and the proscription of organisations including Hamas and Palestine Action have transformed political expression into potential criminal offences. Sections 12 and 13 of the Terrorism Act have been used to prosecute speeches, social media posts, and symbolic gestures. A key tactic in this framework is the treatment of everyday political demonstrations as ‘prepatory’ stages on a “rising staircase” towards insurgency, thereby justifying military-style intervention into civic life before any violence has occurred or been threatened.

THE REPRESSIVE NETWORK

Beneath the apparent chaos of individual incidents, the database reveals a coordinated political ecology of repression.

These actors form a distributed network, each node performing a distinct but complementary role: the media manufactures discursive cover; lawfare groups weaponise legal frameworks; institutions enforce discipline; police stage public spectacles of state power. Together, they make systematic violence look like the ordinary functioning of liberal institutions. Below are a few incidents from the Index that illustrate the range of actors involved.

WHERE DOES THE INDEX'S DATA COME FROM?

The ELSC systematically documents incidents of repression against Palestine solidarity across Europe, focusing on Germany, Britain, and the Netherlands.

DATA COMES FROM MULTIPLE SOURCES:

1) Direct reports via our website: elsc.support/intake
2) Monitoring of mainstream and social media
3) Fieldwork at demonstrations and through our legal casework
4) Private communications from within the movement

Every incident is checked against our inclusion criteria and cross-verified against other sources like interviews, footage, records, or news reports before being recorded. Incomplete or unverifiable data is excluded. Each incident is then classified by actor, target, and form of repression, following standardised entry and writing guidelines to keep the data consistent and comparable.

Consent, anonymity, and safety guide everything we publish. Data appears publicly only when it's already public or explicit consent has been given, and consent can be withdrawn at any time. We collect only the minimum data needed, and never anything relating to ethnicity, gender, or other protected characteristics.

FEATURED INCIDENTS

The Index of Repression includes featured incidents that bring the database to life, they provide the context behind the data and illustrate how repression unfolds in practice. Rather than presenting incidents in isolation, they trace how different forms of repression intersect between incidents, actors, targets and allegations. They serve as a storytelling tool, providing narrative insights into how multiple silencing mechanisms are used simultaneously against the movement, or a specific individual or group.

FEATURED INCIDENT

Police arrested 40 protesters at "Hands off Rafah" demonstration outside Westminster station

On 27 May 2024, the Palestine coalition, comprising of organisations Palestine Solidarity Campaign (PSC), Friends of Al-Aqsa (FOA), Stop the War, Palestinian Forum in Britain (PFB), Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND) and Muslim Association of Britain (MAB) announced a “Hands off Rafah” emergency demonstration at Downing Street for the following day on Tuesday, 28 May 2024. The demonstration was called in response to Israeli military attacks on a refugee camp in the Tal al-Sultan area of Rafah in Gaza, which killed at least 46 civilians.

On 28 May, the demonstration began at 6pm opposite Downing Street in London, with around 10,000 protesters attending. At 7:17pm, the Metropolitan shared a post on X (formerly Twitter) announcing “The turnout has significantly exceeded the estimates of the organisers. To ensure the safety of everyone taking part we have closed Whitehall to traffic. We have put in a new condition requiring the protest to end at 8pm and we'll reopen the road as soon as possible after that.” Around 500 protesters remained past 8pm, and police began arresting protesters they alleged to be “ringleaders” and not complying with a dispersal order under section 35 of the Anti-social Behaviour, Crime and Policing Act 2014.

Police kettled the hundreds of protesters, amongst them children and elderly people, and refused to allow protesters to leave the kettle for several hours unless they presented IDs. Police arrested a total of 40 protesters, alleging breaching Public Order Act conditions, obstructing the highway and assaulting emergency workers. Amongst the arrested from the kettle was a parent who was separated from their young child, without the police making arrangements in the parent’s absence. Activists reported conflicting information given by the police, including arresting activists for refusing to give their details under section 50 of the Police Reform Act 2002. However, legal observers noted that the section is to be applied in reference to individualised anti-social behaviour, rather than a blanket power to arrest a mass group of people.

Police imposed bail conditions on the arrested activists, including restricting movement for three months by not entering the borough of Westminster and not attending future events by PSC.

THE ARCHITECTURE CAN BE BROKEN

The system documented in our analysis is not as solid as it looks, and the movement is proving it. Across Britain, activists, workers, students, and their legal advocates have resisted sanctions, overturned convictions, held repressive actors to account, and won legal recognition for anti-Zionist belief. The repression is severe – but it is not undefeated. These are some cases where the movement has fought back and won. The frameworks weaponised against Palestine solidarity can be turned back on those who misuse them!

2024 MILLER RULING AND THE LEGAL RECOGNITION OF ANTI-ZIONIST BELIEF

Bristol Employment Tribunal ruled that Professor David Miller's anti-Zionism constitutes a "protected philosophical belief" under the Equality Act 2010. Miller had been dismissed after a coordinated smear campaign. The ruling applies not only to academics, but to students, workers, and activists.

2025 HOLDING REPRESSIVE ACTORS TO ACCOUNT

The movement is now turning regulatory frameworks against those who weaponised them. The Independent Press Standards Organisation (IPSO) acknowledged a pattern of ethical breaches at The Jewish Chronicle (51% of investigated complaints were upheld). The ELSC and the Public Interest Law Centre filed complaints to the Solicitors Regulation Authority against UKLFI director Caroline Turner for alleged misuse of legal processes, and to the Bar Standards Board against senior barristers and patrons of UKLFI, arguing that their professional status had been used to amplify legal threats. The Charity Commission opened a parallel probe into UKLFI's charitable wing following complaints by CAGE and Led By Donkeys. Organisations long accustomed to using regulators as a weapon are now under scrutiny themselves.

2025 CAMPAIGN AGAINST ANTISEMITISM PROSECUTION DISMISSED AS "ABUSIVE"

District Judge Snow dismissed a private prosecution brought by the Campaign Against Antisemitism (CAA) against comedian Reginald D. Hunter, finding the CAA had acted in a "misleading and partial" manner and that its "true and sole motive" was to silence him – a judicial endorsement of what the movement has long argued.

2026 FILTON 24 ACQUITTED & PALESTINE ACTION PROSCRIPTION RULED UNLAWFUL

In early 2026, juries acquitted all Filton 24 activists on charges of aggravated burglary for taking direct action against Israeli arms factory Elbit Systems, a historic win for the movement. Sustained movement pressure, including months-long hunger strikes by defendants held on remand, had already forced the government to withdraw a £2bn Elbit contract before a single verdict was returned. In the same month, the High Court ruled the government's proscription of Palestine Action unlawful.

Both wins were short-lived. In the retrial of six Filton defendants, four were convicted of criminal damage and sentenced as terrorists under section 69 of the Sentencing Act 2020 – the first time in British legal history that direct action activists have received a terrorist sentencing. The Court of Appeal simultaneously overturned the High Court ruling, upholding the Palestine Action proscription as "justified and proportionate". These were devastating blows.

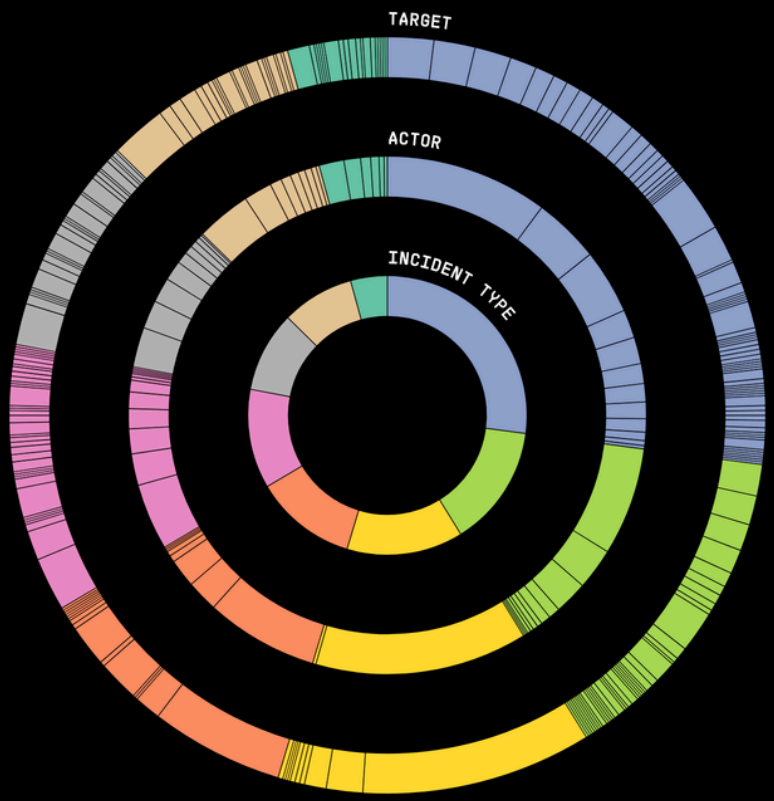

But the movement has not accepted these outcomes as final. Supporters have packed courtrooms, rallied outside Woolwich Crown Court and the Old Bailey, and stood in solidarity at every stage of the trials. Palestine Action co-founder Huda Ammori is pursuing a challenge at the Supreme Court and the European Court of Human Rights. The case of Rajiv Menon KC, whose contempt of court proceedings arose from his closing remarks during his defence of one of the Filton defendants, making him the first barrister in England's history to face such a trial, has mobilised all levels of the legal profession to confront the chilling effect, and the right to a fair trial. The state's attempts to criminalise Palestine solidarity has instead galvanised the movement challenging repression in the streets, in the courts, and wherever it may be.

WHAT THE MOVEMENT CAN DO

The Index documents the many fronts through which Zionist lawfare groups, complicit state actors, and institutions repress Palestine solidarity. The movement must bring that same tenacity across every front available to us – to resist repression and advance the struggle for Palestinian liberation.

1. BUILD SOLIDARITY ACROSS SECTORS

No sector can resist alone. Students, workers, healthcare professionals, artists, and legal advocates each face forms of repression specific to their context, but the forces arrayed against them are the same. Build and deepen alliances across sectors.

2. DEFEND & RECLAIM ORGANISING SPACES

Universities, workplaces, streets, and cultural institutions are places where political subjectivity is formed and collective power is built, defend them!

3. USE THE LEGAL VICTORIES

The Miller ruling and Abu Qamar's tribunal victory establishing that solidarity speech cannot be conflated with support for terrorism each demonstrate that the law can be turned back on those who weaponise it. These rulings are tools for everyone, anti-Zionism is a protected philosophical belief, and that protection applies not only to those deemed 'experts' but to students, workers, and activists. Use these rulings. Cite them in disciplinary hearings, in correspondence with employers, in complaints to regulators. Embed them in the movement's collective legal literacy.

4. USE EVERY COMPLAINTS PROCESS AVAILABLE

Identify the relevant regulator for the actors targeting you or your organisation – whether legal, charitable, media, or professional – and file complaints. These processes are slow and resource intensive, but they create public records of misconduct, constrain repeat offenders, and shift the climate in which repression operates.

5. PUSH YOUR UNION TO ACT

If you experience disciplinary action, suspension, or dismissal for Palestine solidarity, your union should fight for you. But unions must also act before the crisis and challenge the adoption of the IHRA definition in workplaces; move and support BDS motions; organise solidarity with workers facing repression; and resist the securitisation of the public sector through Prevent. If your union is not doing these things, organise within it to make them priorities.

6. OPPOSE THE LEGAL FRAMEWORKS THAT ENABLE REPRESSION

The Terrorism Act 2000, the Prevent strategy, and the IHRA definition are repeatedly used as tools against the movement. Call for independent investigations into the role of police, prosecutors, and counterterrorism units in the systematic targeting of Palestine solidarity. Demand that government departments and local authorities cease their adoption and enforcement of IHRA. Oppose Prevent not only on principle but in line with the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which has urged the UK government to suspend Prevent.

7. USE PRIVILEGE STRATEGICALLY

Those organising against repression do so from vastly different positions of security. Migrants, precarious workers, students on visas, and racialised communities face the sharpest risks. The Defend Our Juries protests, in which thousands of people – many of them not usual activists – stood in solidarity against the proscription of Palestine Action despite the risk of arrest (many were indeed arrested), offer a model of how privilege can be mobilised to protect the most exposed. If you face fewer consequences speaking out, use that margin of safety to shield others. If you have resources, share them.

8. BUILD LEGAL DEFENCE AND SOLIDARITY FUNDS

Legal defence is expensive, and the state's strategy of grinding down the movement depends on exhausting it's resources. Build community solidarity funds before they are needed. Pool resources to support those facing repression – whether with bail, legal representation, or material support for themselves and their families. The Filton 24 hunger strikers survived in part because the movement organised around them. That organising required resources. Build that capacity now, not in the moment of crisis.

9. DOCUMENT EVERYTHING

The Index of Repression exists to expose patterns, legitimise grievances, and inform activism. But it is only as powerful as the movement that feeds it. Keep reporting incidents to us. Your documentation expands the movement's collective capacity to fight back, turns private experience into public evidence, and shapes strategic response. Use the database, share it, build its visibility.

10. RESIST DISTRACTION AND SUSTAIN FOCUS ON CORE DEMANDS

The database makes plain what many have long suspected: repression is designed to consume the movement's time, resources, and emotional energy in perpetual defence. To allow this coordinated effort to dictate our priorities is to cede the terrain of struggle. We must consciously and collectively resist this depletion, continuing to organise around the central demands of Palestinian liberation: an immediate, meaningful, and permanent ceasefire; a comprehensive arms embargo; the strategic BDS campaign; and support for Palestinian political prisoners.
